

GMO Corn and Soy Test Results

Consumer Reports tested a wide variety of processed foods with corn or soy ingredients on the label as a snapshot of the current US market. We only selected products with corn or soy on their ingredients list.

We purchased and tested products that were conventional, claimed to be “Natural”, “Organic”, or made some type of verified or unverified “Non-GMO” claim. All products were purchased between April and July of 2014. It is important to note that between testing and publishing, that there were manufacturers who were obtaining or obtained Non-GMO Project Verified certification. This demonstrates an actively changing market that seems to be responding to consumer demand.

The product was considered to be “Non-GMO” if test results showed that the corn/soy DNA was not more than 0.9% GMO. The product was considered to be “GMO” if the corn/soy DNA was greater than 0.9% GMO. The 0.9% threshold is the cutoff currently used by the Non-GMO Project for food ingredients. All of the products that we tested that contained greater than 0.9% GMO corn or soy had substantially more than 0.9% (these products had between 18% and 100% GMO corn or soy and on average more than 70%).
